Other media Talking Tom and Friends franchise has expanded beyond apps and animated series. The franchise also sells branded merchandise and music videos. [218] Talking Tom and Talking Angela's music video for the single You Get Me, created in partnership with Walt Disney Records, has received over 350 million views on YouTube since March 2020. [5] Speaking Angela has also recorded her first solo song called That's Falling in Love. [219] Tom and Talking Angela's Stand By Me received 26 million views as of April 2020. [220] Talking Tom and Friends launched a series of interactive games called Superstar in 2012. Luxury games talk and interact with multiple Talking Tom and Friends, Friends, as well as each solo, using a voice recognition system. [221] The series has since been discontinued. Controversy Paedophile prank In February 2014, Speaking Angela was the subject of an Internet hoax claiming it encourages children to disclose personal information about themselves, which is allegedly then used by paedophiles to locate the location of these children. The rumor, which was widely circulated on Facebook and several websites claiming to be dedicated to parenting, claims that Angela, the main character of the game, asks the user of the game for private personal information using the text of the game-chat feature. Other versions of the rumor even attribute the disappearance of a child to the app.[222] or claim to be run by a paedophile ring, while some go so far as to even claim that the user is recorded by the camera and can be seen in Angela's eyes. [223] The previous rumor came from an article about Huzlers, which has since proven to be fake, like many articles on the satirical website. [224] Reputation has been claimed to be true even by YouTubeurs and even on the app review page in apple's app store and Google Play Store, even though there have been no verified reports of such events occurring. [225] [226] It was debunked by Snopes.com a short time later. The site's owners, Barbara and David Mikkelson, said they had tried to urge it to give answers asking for personal information, but were unsuccessful even when explicitly asking sexual questions. [227] While it is true that in the game with children function by angela asks for the user's name, age and personal preferences to determine conversation topics, Outfit7 has said that this information is all anonymous and all personal information is removed from it. It is also impossible for a person to take control of what Angela says in the game, since the application is based on chat bot software. [228] In 2015, the prank was revived again on Facebook, prompting online security firm Sophos and The Guardian to debunk it again. [229] Sophos employee Paul Ducklin wrote on the company's blog that the message posted on Facebook promoting the hoax was close to 600 rambling, repeated words, despite claiming at first that he had no words to describe the situation. It's poorly written and bordering on being illiterate and incomprehensible. [230] Bruce Wilcox, one of the game's developers, has attributed the popularity of the prank to the fact that the chatbot program in Talking Angela is so realistic. [231] However, real concern has increased that child function Play can be too easy for children to close, which, if they did, would allow them to buy coins, which can be used as currency in the game, through iTunes. [232] Disabling child mode also allows for the chat function, which, while not connecting your children with paedophiles, continues to raise concerns as well, according to Stuart Dredge, a reporter for the Guardian. Dredge wrote that in chat mode, chat, requests information such as the user's name. [229] Impact Terror has significantly boosted the popularity of the game, and is credited with helping the app make it into the top 10 free iPhone apps immediately after the prank became widely known in February 2015[233] and 3rd most popular for all iPhone apps at the beginning of next month. [231] Age-inappropriate advertising In 2015, the My Talking Tom app was reported to have age-inappropriate ads for adult services. The UK Advertising Standards Authority ruled that advertising for an adult website was delivered to underage children via the app.[234][235] The ASA noted that Outfit7 had a strict advertising policy but that the company had not been able to determine which ad network had served an advertisement unsuitable for age in a children's app and how the ads were presented in the app. [236] My Talking Tom slot had over 11 million downloads and was the leading gaming app in 135 countries around the world within 10 days of its launch. [237] [238] The Talking Tom and Friends channel on YouTube has over 10 million subscribers and 3.5 billion views as of March 2020. [239] Since April 2020, the franchise has downloaded its apps more than 12 billion times. [240] The My Talking Tom app also won the award for Best iPad Game: Kids, Education & Family at the Tabby Awards 2014, the global competition for best tablet app. [241] Tom speaking in 2014 was also voted the favorite of the 2014 Tabby Award Users' Choice in two categories, Best iPad Game: Kids, Education & Family and Best Game: Puzzle. , Cards & Family. [242] Talking Tom and Friends won the best animated series award at the 2016 Cablefax Awards.
